ECO A 106 Principles of Economics: Microeconomics (3 credits)

This course examines how our consumption impacts the commonly held core values of our society. We will focus on issues on sex and sexuality and look at them through a lens of women's and gender theory and basic principles of economics. The course will focus on changes in supply and demand, income distribution, consumer behavior and other economic factors and address how our consumption impacts what we believe about sexuality, pornography, gender, our bodies and our health.
